A group of 7th grade students participated in a campaign to raise awareness about students with learning disabilities who are frequent targets of bullying. The video is available above.

It tells the story of a group of 7 graders started a hate group against a student with dyslexia. At first, it was fun to joke around, but soon they realized they were overdoing it and decided to remove the hate group. A student with dyslexia is still afraid to use a laptop and a bookmarker because she is afraid of their reaction. They learned that there should be no jealousy among real friends, but understanding, support and acceptance.
